- Panels manufactured specifically for the Kirsch Ripplefold drapery snap system. The drapery panels snap onto carriers that swivel, eliminating 'flat' drapery areas. flair21 uses Kirsch specifications when making Ripplefold draperies.
- A permanently stiffened, nylon snap tape is stitched to the top of a flat panel.
- The snaps on the nylon snap tape are 4 ¼" on center (regardless of the drapery fullness).
- Headings suspended under the track cannot tip or sag.
- The bottom of the drapery will have a Eurohem or a double-turned hem—your choice, as the fabric allows.
- Available unlined or lined (each available with Eurohem or a double-turned hem).
- Interlining is recommended for use with silks, because this natural fiber is very UV sensitive. Interlining is also available for use with other lightweight fabrics. Interlining is always an upgrade.
- Panels are finished with corner weights (with the exception of open-weave fabrics).
- Double 1 ½" side hem is standard. Side hems are blind stitched (with the exception of open-weave fabrics).
- Lengths up to 185" will have a ¼" tolerance. Lengths over 185" will have a 1" tolerance.
- Maximum finished lengths are determined by the fabric design and hem—see the details above each chart in the Retail Pricing Guide. For extra long lengths, contact Customer Service for pricing.
- Trim or banding applied to the leading edge (LE) or the hem, is available as an upgrade.
- The fullness is determined by the spacing of the carriers on the rod (not by the snap tape), draperies can be 60%, 80%, 100%, or 120% fullness
- On the rod, there is a master on each leading edge. One on a one-way draw, two on a split draw. There are two different types of master:
 - Butt-Master (cord draw only): Butt together in center for a continuous looking flow in drapery folds, on a split draw.
 - Overlap Master (cord or baton draw): Overlap in center for best privacy, also assures less light gap.
- flair21 will add an extra snap on the leading edge or return end of the drapery, according to Kirsch directions, depending on the type of master.
